Hope Langham proves to be an able assistant to Clay's proteptive plans, like the wholesome, breezy and brave American girthat she is, and it is largely due to her efforts that success attends many of the military moves inaugurated by Clay. What else, then, could possibly happen than that these two should go the way pointed out to all true lovers in the end? There is a large cast in the play, Mr. James Rennie as Captin Stuart leading the support that is well maintained by Misses Due and Outtrim, and by Messrs. Frederick Allen, fra Earle, Joseph Kennedy Arling Aleine, Lee Millar, John C. Davis and others. In the second act is a very pretty moonlight scene at the Langham cottage, and, indeed, the entire plece is well set with stage accessaries. The play is to continue throughout the week, and if Sunday's first night may be taken as a measure of favor with which it will be received, there will be a crowded house at each performance. "Raffles" made a hit at the Bungalow theater Sunday night, and the Arington players demonstrated in a satisfactory manner to the large audience that the Bungalow has a stock company that is fully capable and competent to handle high class plays and present them in such a manner that a comparison with former productions does not reflect on their ability to give a splendid performance. John Ince as Raffles gives a splendid impersonation of one of most interesting characters, and the high sense of humer, coupled with the curious impulse for thleving that proves Raffles' undoing is so deftly and artistically handled by Mr. Ince that he has the audience with him all the time, and they heartfly enjoy his escapades and his climax with Captain Bedford, the detective, a part that is well handled by Charlos J.
